Chapter 1 by Faith Neumann

Once upon a time there lived a girl. Her name, nobody knew. All they knew was that she stood alone. Her name she knew was Ava. She didn't like that name so everybody called her Girl. Girl had short brown hair that matched with her dull brown eyes, and with pink lips so everything was simple. She did not care is she stood alone or if she had no friends. She didn't care that her parents didn't love her, all she cared about was school.

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka ✎

School was an excellent way to drown one's self, she was quick to realize. The system drained individuality, and reduced you down into a barcode and a school. She didn't mind flying under the radar. Her grades were average, perfectly matching her average lifestyle. Middle class, decent looks, decent life.

Until it wasn't.

She had only heard the term "school shooting" from scare adult's lips and the television. But she was going to learn what it meant firsthand.
